

Starting January 2025 Mentoring for Effective Nature Conservation (MENC)

Join this programme to connect across organisations, develop new skills and enhance your own performance.

A strong and effective network is crucial to sustainable impacts in and beyond the conservation sector. It will allow leaders of nature conservation organisations to operate more effectively.

MENC aims at supporting participants in their individual learning and leadership development. Thus it strengthens the capacity of all partner organisations to increase their individual and joint impact.

Who can join?

This programme is mainly intended for employees of nature conservation organisations from Europe and the Mediterranean Basin. Other applications might also be considered.

Interested mentors and mentees need to

- be open-minded
- be ready to learn
- be committed to nature conservation
- have been employed with their organization for at least one year

To apply as a mentor you should

- have good communication skills
- be a good listener
- be able to show real interest in the mentee and their development
- have at least seven years of professional experience

In this programme you will

- experience the power and potential of mentoring to foster long-term personal and professional growth to
- become more conscious of your own leadership of and impact on others
- enhance your ability to collaborate across boundaries
- develop better understanding and cooperation skills between generations
- connect with other like-minded individuals working in conservation
